K Tatsiramos, S W Polachek : Informal Employment in Emerging and Transition Economies: 34 (Research in Labor Economics) before purchasing it in order to gauge whether or not it would be worth my time, and all praised Informal Employment in Emerging and Transition Economies: 34 (Research in Labor Economics):

"Research in Labor Economics" is one of the major references for all academics and researchers in labor economics and is important reading for government policy makers and think-tanks. The series provides a unique application of economics and econometrics to analyze worker well-being, it has an international focus and promotes rigorous policy oriented research.

Economists from Europe and the US explore informal employment in countries that have recently adopted capitalism. The topics are tax evasion and minimum wage noncompliance, evidence from the Russian flat tax reform on the effect of taxation on informal employment, detecting wage under-reporting using a double-hurdle model, the role of labor taxation and social benefit design in the new European Union member states, evidence from Tajikistan for migration as a substitute for informal activities, evidence from panel data for the persistence of informality, and job separations and informality in the Russian labor market. Seven of the eight studies are from a June 2011 workshop in Bonn. There is no index. Distributed in North America by Turpin Distribution. --Book News Inc. Portland, OR
