Profits: Mark Mobius' Field Guide to Investing in the Developing World By China Author Forum Financial analysis in Emerging Markets is not a sport for the timid, and definitely not one for someone who prefer to sit at home in his armchair with a 10-K, prospectus and the TV turned to CNBC. Investment legend, John Templeton proteacute;geacute;, Hong Kong expat before it was cool, and all around financial adventurer Mark Mobius is as far from the armchair analyst as you can get, braving untold dangers and logging millions of miles in his well-used Gulfstream jet to get the inside story of companies in emerging markets around the world. In the revised and updated version of his book, Passport to Profits, he tells a selection of his (numerous) stories from several countries in Europe, Asia, Africa and South America, stories of billions of dollars earned, millions lost, and many potentially fatal mistakes narrowly avoided- as well as a few knocks on his (bald) head along the way. However, before you start to assume that Passport to Profits is simply another story of a wealthy investor telling how he became successful (a well-worn genre, and one that Nassim Taleb rightfully mocked), let me disabuse you of this notion. While Passport is an investment memoir, the entire book is written from the perspective of a seasoned veteran using his war stories as instruction in what to do and what not to do when journeying into perilous markets, listing throughout the book his set of 84 Mobius Rules- a pithy set of instructions that any value investor worth his salt should pay heed to, not unlike Peter Lynch's One Up On Wall Street. Laid out as narrative "case studies", Mobius' journey into the markets of Estonia, Russia, Hong Kong, Thailand, Brazil, Nigeria and South Africa (as well as side trips to Argentina, Chile, Peru, Cambodia, Vietnam, Kazakhstan, Slovenia, Romania and Libya) are extremely instructive, and offer lessons that are worthwhile in investigating any foreign market- developed or not.(continued)
