I was surprised at how much education, inspiration, and invigoration I received from reading 'The Charisma Code'.This book is filled with perfect stories, data, theory, and even some healthy speculation. There's just the right blend of research and anecdote for my taste, inspiring quotes, and a global-level vision. In addition to the theory, there are practical strategies for increasing your level of charisma in speaking, posture, and interaction. If you are hoping to improve your influence in the boardroom, bedroom, or any other context, there are great practices to engage in and see real results. Finally, what hits me the most is how clearly the author points out that the currency of our human lives is the connections we make with each other. By understanding how these connections are made, we understand ourselves more deeply, and can begin to bring peace to our currently divided world.

Insightful! Robin has a unique way of communicating truths that is refreshing and inspiring. If you're someone who's participated in a lot of workshops, done work on your self and is on a conscious path, then no doubt you'll enjoy this and find new way to connect to wisdom that you likely already know, and perhaps nuggets and gems in ways that you might not have previously considered or been aware of. If this kind of thing is new to you, then you're in for a treat and this book offers many useful ideas and tools to help you shine and revel in the truth of yourself. Charisma is not comeliness. It is about discovering your gifts, embracing them, and sharing with the world. Connection is what it's about, and to connect with others we must first learn to deeply connect with ourselves.

Read this book, more than once. Let its message seep into your being. It will change how you communicate; it will change how you connect with others. Charisma, isn't just about attracting others, it requires that you also connect with them. It requires that you find value in them, and in yourself. Among many other insights, I liked how my "selfishness" is also my "altruism." When I really take care of others, I also take care of myself. It feels good, and is self-perpetuating. The message here is powerful, and one that we need on a global scale. We're connected, we need each other. We need to start now. You and I, can bring something of value in this planetary shift. This book can be our guide.
